

News Release

www.njcourts.com

For more information:
Winnie Comfort
Tammy Kendig
609-292-9580

For immediate release:
Feb. 11, 2015

New Training Video Helps Attorneys Serve Indigent Defendants

The New Jersey Judiciary today released a training video for attorneys who represent indigent defendants in parole revocation hearings. The video is the latest in a series of training videos designed to help attorneys assigned by the courts to represent indigent defendants.

The attorneys provide this service “pro bono,” which is a shortened Latin phrase that means “for the public good.”

In his introduction to the video, Chief Justice Stuart Rabner says, “Pro bono work is vital to our court system. One of the most cherished protections our citizens have is the constitutional right to be represented by counsel.”

In New Jersey, defendants who cannot afford an attorney are entitled to free legal representation in certain types of cases. While public defenders are available in certain case types, private attorneys share the responsibility of providing counsel when the law does not provide for the public defender to do so.

The attorneys are assigned on a rotating basis. They receive no compensation. With few exceptions, all New Jersey attorneys are required to accept pro bono assignments.

Attorneys who do pro bono work might not have experience in practicing the type of law that applies in their assigned case. The video series helps them prepare to represent their clients.

The parole revocation video provides guidance on how and when to set up an initial meeting with a client; the documents and information that the attorney should expect to receive during discovery; how the two-part hearing process is conducted and what to do after the hearing.

The video also directs attorneys to a manual prepared by the Judiciary for their use in those cases.

Additional videos in the series help pro bono attorneys represent clients in domestic violence contempt cases and in municipal appeals. To view the videos, go to njcourts.com and click on the YouTube icon on the right side of the page.

###

