Todd McManus Named New Director of Management and Administrative Services

Acting Administrative Director Judge Glenn A. Grant today named Todd McManus the new director of the Office of Management and Administrative Services (OMAS). McManus succeeds Shelley R. Webster, who is retiring.

McManus will oversee the development and implementation of standards, policies and procedures for human resources as well as financial and support services. Since May 2017, he has served as assistant director of financial services, which oversees the Judiciary's financial operations, including budgeting, financial reporting, and purchasing.

McManus joined the Judiciary in 2012 as finance division manager, a position he held for nearly five years. Before his career with the Administrative Office of the Courts, McManus worked in the private sector as a manager, assistant controller and accountant for several companies spanning 12 years.

“Mr. McManus brings great awareness and understanding of our court system both at the local and statewide level. He is extremely qualified to assume the position of director of the Office of Management and Administrative Services for the Judiciary,” Judge Grant said.

Webster has served as OMAS director since October 2008. She joined the Judiciary in 2000 as chief of the financial services unit, was promoted to administrator of the unit in 2002 and named assistant director for management services the following year.

“Ms. Webster is an outstanding public employee who has ably served the Judiciary for two decades,” Judge Grant said. “I have relied upon her knowledge and expertise extensively during my time as administrative director.”
